Licensing Terms

Journal of Educational Research on Children, Parents and Teachers (<https://ercptjournal.org/journal/>) welcomes submissions from prospective authors in the field of education, and related disciplines.

1. Licensing terms

We have a policy of publishing all JERCPT articles as open access under the Creative Commons Attribution License CC-BY license (the current version is CC-BY, version 4.0). The article may be downloaded, disseminated, and modified for both commercial and nonprofit purposes, as long as the original author is properly credited. This means that the author(s) retain copyright. The author(s) grant the JERCPT publisher permission to publish their article, including the display, storage, copying, and reuse of their work.

Instructions for authors

- Authors can submit their manuscripts through the Manuscript submission center or through the journal's official email address editor.jercpt@gmail.com
- Papers must be submitted to JERCPT in MS-Word in Times New Roman 12-point format, with double line spacing, and the manuscript pages should not be more than 12–15 pages including references.
- All papers submitted to the IJHHR must be original, presented in a clear and succinct style, and adhere to reporting requirements that are technically accurate.
- A manuscript's language quality and statistical reports must be of the highest caliber, and the author is responsible for meeting these requirements. The Editor-in-Chief reserves the right to ask the author(s) for documentation that a statistician has read the article as well as a copy of the language editing report.
- Authors who are non-native English speakers are urged to have their manuscript(s) thoroughly edited by reputable language editing/firms like Wordvice, Editage, and AJE before submission.
- JERCPT only provides light copy-editing after the paper has been accepted for publication to make sure that manuscripts adhere to the journal's style model.
- A minimum of five alphabetically organized keywords should be included in the abstract of the article, which should be between 150 and 250 words long.
- The author's information page must also include the paper's title, the author's name (first name and last name), the corresponding author's email address, and a contact number (optional). When submitting a manuscript to the journal, authors need sign up and give their ORCID number.
- The following components must be present in the manuscript's main body: an introduction, a statement of the problem, the purpose of the study, research questions and hypotheses, and methods and materials. Results and Discussion (must address study ramifications, constraints, and ideas for additional research), Conclusion (must contain suggestions), and References (must include DOI numbers where available and URL of web documents with access date).
- To describe each author's unique contribution to the research output, we encourage writers to use the Contributor Roles Taxonomy (CRediT). All authors mentioned in a paper for IJHHR must adhere to the standards for authorship as established by the International Committee of Medical Journal Editors (ICMJE), which include:
 - significant contributions to the work's conception or design, or the gathering, analyzing, or interpretation of data for the work;
 - writing the work or critically revising it for important intellectual content;
 - final approval of the version to be published;
 - agreement to be responsible for all aspects of the work, including ensuring that any concerns regarding the accuracy or integrity of any part of the work are thoroughly investigated.

The four requirements for authorship should be met by everyone who is designated as an author.

- The journal adheres strictly to the American Psychological Association's Citation Style, therefore there are no ambiguities in its citing practices. For more information, it is advised that the author(s) refer to the most recent edition of the APA Referencing Style Manual. The authors can also review an example article from a recent journal issue.
- When a paper is submitted to JERCPT, it must not have already been published in another journal or be under consideration for publication by another journal.
- Any potential conflicts of interest that the authors may have with the paper must be properly disclosed at the time of submission.
- Any potential conflicts of interest that the authors may have with the paper must be properly disclosed at the time of submission. Authors must complete and resubmit this Disclosure Form together with their manuscript submission since JERCPT abides by the guidelines set forth by IMJE regarding Disclosure of Financial and Non-Financial Relationships and Activities, and Conflicts of Interest.
- A statement of compliance with pertinent ethical standards must be submitted in order to publish in this journal. The ethics statement part of the paper must make it apparent whether or not the study complied with ethical standards for research such as the WMA Declaration of Helsinki and the APA Ethical Principles on Research and Publication.
- Only manuscripts with a similarity level of 20% or less will be externally examined for publication consideration. To verify the degree of resemblance between their article and existing sources, authors are encouraged to employ plagiarism detectors like TURNITIN.
- The IJHHR Copyright Form must be completed and returned by the author(s) before their article may go into production after being accepted for publication in this journal.

2. Editorial process

General Information

Every manuscript submitted to the journal is examined as part of the peer review process by at least two anonymous referees using a double-blind peer review process to assess the contribution, originality, relevance, and presentation. Within two months of a manuscript's submission, the Editor-in-Chief is tasked with notifying each prospective author of the review's findings. However, it is crucial for writers to be informed that the review process could, in some situations, take up to three months due to the huge volume of submissions that JERCPT receives.

Duties of Editorial Board Members

The Editor-in-Chief, who takes the final decision based on the referees' findings, receives publication recommendations from members of the Editorial Board and uses them to handle submissions through the peer review process. Members of the editorial board are also accountable for offering the journal, as needed, professional advice based on their research experience on matters relating to the journal's policies and publication ethics.

Reviewers' Responsibilities and Impact on Editorial Decisions

The Editor-in-Chief is assisted in making editorial choices via a peer review process. Additionally, peer review assists the author in many ways in order to improve the article through editorial contacts with the author.

Promptness

Referees should tell the Editor-in-Chief and resign from the review process if they feel unqualified to assess a submission or if they know it will be impossible to do so quickly.

Confidentiality

Any manuscript that is submitted for review must be handled with confidentiality. The manuscript must not be shown to or discussed with anyone else without the editor's permission.

Standards for Objectivity

It's crucial to carry out evaluations impartially. Personal criticism of the author is not appropriate. Referees must clearly state their opinions and provide evidence to back them up. To make sure the paper complies with the standards established by the journal, a reviewer must also read the Instructions for Authors.

Acknowledgment of Sources

Reviewers are expected to find pertinent published works that the article's authors have not cited as part of the review process. Any claim that an observation, a deduction, or an argument has already been recorded should be supported by a citation to the relevant original work. Additionally, it is a reviewer's responsibility to alert the editor of any significant similarities or overlaps between the article under consideration and any other previously published paper that they are aware of.

Disclosure of Conflict of Interest

Information and concepts that have undergone peer review should be kept private and should not be used to one's own advantage. It is crucial that reviewers refrain from considering articles where they have links or connections—whether cooperative, competitive, or other—with any of the authors, businesses, or organizations connected to the papers. Reviewers must adhere to this directive in order to declare any conflicts of interest when performing their duties related to the article review process because IJHHR follows IMJE's guidelines on Disclosure of Financial and Non-Financial Relationships and Activities, and Conflicts of Interest.

Author obligations

Reporting requirements

Reports describing original research should be written by writers who can accurately describe the work that has been done and discuss its importance. The underlying data should be accurately represented in the study. An article must provide enough specifics and citations to enable others to duplicate the work in order to be published. The use of deceptive or deliberately false remarks is unethical behavior and is not permitted.

Data Access and Retention

Authors are encouraged to include raw data whenever possible when submitting a work for editorial consideration. According to the ALPSP-STM Statement on Data and Databases, it is anticipated that the authors will be willing to make the raw data freely accessible for public inspection and that they will keep the raw data on hand for a reasonable amount of time following publication. The Harvard Dataverse and preprint servers are two examples of dataverses where authors are encouraged to contribute their raw data.

Originality check

The authors should make sure that their writing is wholly unique, and if they have borrowed any ideas or words from others, they should make sure that they have properly cited or quoted them. To stop plagiarism and cheating, JERCPT employs TURNITIN to check the similarity index of submitted articles. Only manuscripts with a similarity value of 20% or less will be externally examined for publication consideration. There may be instances where previously published manuscripts turn out to be plagiarized. Sanctions will be applied in this situation up until the paper is withdrawn.

Multiple, Concurrent, or Redundant Publication

Publishing submissions that fundamentally summarize the same study in more than one journal or principal publication is generally not advised for authors. A manuscript being simultaneously sent to many journals is unethical publishing behavior, which is unacceptable in the publishing industry.

Sources Acknowledgment

Always give credit where credit is due in order to preserve the integrity of your own work. It is advised that authors list works that have influenced their understanding of the type of work being presented.

Authorship of the paper

Only those people who were in charge of the study's conception, design, execution, or interpretation should be given the right to sign their names as authors. All co-authors who have made a significant contribution to the research must be listed as co-authors. It is vital to thank or recognize as contributions those who participated in significant elements of the research project and helped to shape its course. The corresponding author is responsible for making sure that all suitable co-authors are listed in the manuscript, that no inappropriate co-authors are included, and that all co-authors have viewed the final version of the paper and approved it before it is submitted for publication. To describe each author's unique contribution to the research output, we encourage writers to use the Contributor Roles Taxonomy (CRediT). All authors mentioned in a paper for JERCPT publications must adhere to the standards for authorship established by the International Committee of Medical Journal Editors (ICMJE).

Hazards and human or Animal Subjects

If the work involved the use of any chemicals, techniques, or equipment, the manuscript must clearly identify any exceptional risks related to their use.

Disclosure of Conflicts of Interest

Any financial or other significant conflicts of interest that could be assumed to have influenced the findings or interpretation of the paper should, whenever feasible, be disclosed by the authors in their manuscript. Complete disclosure of all funding sources for the project is required. Misconduct is defined as the willful omission to disclose those relationships or activities listed on the journal's disclosure form.

Fundamental Errors in Published Works and Retraction policy

If an author finds a serious error or inaccuracy in a piece of writing they have previously published, it is their responsibility to swiftly tell the journal's editor-in-chief or publisher and to work with the editor to retract or fix the work. JERCPT adheres to the COPE Guidelines for Retracting Articles when deciding whether to withdraw a published manuscript that has serious errors.

Withdrawal Policy

Authors must forfeit the submission fee they paid if they decide to remove their manuscript from JERCPT after submission and during the peer review process. Within one month of submitting the manuscript, the author(s) must notify the Editor-in-Chief of their choice. After a month of paper submission, the JERCPT Editorial Board does not permit withdrawals until the paper has been reviewed and approved.
